Subject: Media update: Freedom Convoy 2022 (2022-02-05 - #4 - 21:00)
Good evening,

Here are the Communications and media highlights as of 9:00 p.m.
There continues to be a high amount of media attention on the convoy protests occurring simultaneously in various parts across the country, including those in Ottawa.
During the OPS Board, the Chief mentioned that 60 RCMP officers are being sworn-in as we speak and later confirmed that a total of 257 RCMP officers are being deployed to assist. The Chief also mentioned that the Police Services Act as it is currently written doesn't allow them to respond effectively to this situation and that more resources are required to adequately address the issue. A synopsis is attached for further reference.

An OPS news release was also issued at 6:15 p.m. to update on the enforcement measures including the number of charges laid as well as on the new RCMP resources announced. The news release can be viewed at: <https://www.ottawapolice.ca/Modules/News/index.aspx?lang=en&newsId=73848b167644-4e56-95c0-767136eff481> new media calls have received since the last update.

This is the last update for the day, unless operationally required.

'We need an additional surge of resources:' Ottawa police chief

Ottawa's police chief says police need "an additional surge of resources" to help deal with the protest against COVID-19 vaccine mandates and other public health measures in downtown Ottawa.

An estimated 1,000 vehicles and 5,000 people packed Parliament Hill and downtown streets Saturday afternoon for the ninth day of the "Freedom Convoy" protest. The protest has seen demonstrators park trucks and vehicles on Wellington Street and other downtown streets. Residents have been frustrated with the constant sound of horns blaring, along with fireworks late at night.

"Our city is under siege," said Diane Deans, Ottawa Police Services Board chair and councillor. "This group is emboldened by the lack of enforcement by every level of government. They are terrorizing our residents, torturing them with insistent honking, threatening them and preventing them from leading their lives." (...) Sloly says Ottawa police have received support from Ontario Provincial Police, the RCMP and seven municipal police services. The board is expected to vote on giving 60 RCMP officers the authority to work in Ottawa during the demonstration. Sloly said those officers would be deployed immediately. Camionneurs: un juge dit non à l'injonction sur les klaxons

Un juge de la Cour supérieure de l'Ontario a refusé, samedi, d'accorder une injonction temporaire pour limiter les heures auxquelles les camionneurs rassemblés au centre-ville d'Ottawa peuvent jouer du klaxon ou pour en interdire complètement leur usage. Le juge Hugh McLean est saisi d'une demande en recours collectif de près de 10 millions $ contre les organisateurs du «Convoi pour la liberté 2022» par des résidents du centre-ville d'Ottawa qui n'en peuvent plus du bruit et des désagréments constants. Une demande d'injonction interdisant la continuation de la nuisance continue est inscrite dans le document. Le magistrat a indiqué qu'il n'accorderait pas une injonction interlocutoire temporaire pour le moment afin de permettre aux avocats du Convoi de préparer leur réplique, et pour que le document présenté par l'avocat des plaignants soit plus précis, lui qui contient les noms des organisateurs du mouvement de protestation qui milite pour la fin des obligations sanitaires liées à COVID-19, mais aussi 60 John Doe (camionneurs non identifiés). Ottawa protest's lawyer floats chance of quieter nights amid legal challenge and rising resident anger

A lawyer representing some organizers of ongoing protests in Ottawa says demonstrators may stop honking their horns overnight, as the protests face rising resident anger, a class-action legal challenge and uncertain finances. During discussions over an injunction sought by an Ottawa firm on behalf of downtown residents, a lawyer representing three protest organizers said Saturday protesters are willing to refrain from honking their horns from 8 p.m. to 8 a.m. ET. The judge hearing the case adjourned the issue of an injunction, related to a broader class-action suit, until Monday, but also suggested horns should only be used for a shorter period of time. The $9.8-million suit alleges the protest has caused "significant mental distress, suffering and torment" to residents because of the loud honking "12 to 16 hours" daily. For more than a week, protesters have maintained a near-constant level of noise and disruption in the downtown core of the nation's capital, blocking traffic, honking horns, setting off fireworks and organizing loud music. The number of protesters in the downtown Ottawa area has fluctuated during the past week, from thousands in the city last weekend to about 250 by Tuesday, police said. But Ottawa police announced they expect potentially thousands more protesters to arrive this weekend. CBC Ottawa
Ottawa facing 'real risk' of violence as trucker convoy digs in: ex-police chief

The nation's capital is facing a "real risk" of violence as the trucker convoy digs in, setting up infrastructure and heavy machinery in what Ontario Premier Doug Ford and the Ottawa police chief are both now calling an "occupation" of the city. Tensions are only expected to rise on Saturday, with police estimates of up to 1,000 counterprotesters and thousands of additional convoy supporters making for what former Ottawa police chief Charles Bordeleau called a "volatile" mix. "There's no question the dynamics around who's involved and the different factions and different players that are in town present a real risk and potential for increased violence," he told Global News. "But there are scenarios that may have to evolve where the police will have to escalate and use force to start arresting individuals and removing vehicles that are blocking the area," Bordeleau added. Manifestation à Ottawa: l'attitude de policiers dénoncée par un compte Instagram

Une vidéo montrant des policiers semblant reculer face à un groupe de manifestants du «convoi de la liberté», à Ottawa, a suscité les interrogations d'un compte Instagram opposé au rassemblement qui se tient depuis plus d'une semaine. Identifiant le Service de police d'Ottawa et son chef Peter Sloly, ainsi que le maire de la capitale fédérale, Jim Watson, le compte «Ogconvoydamages2022» s'interroge sur l'intérêt d'envoyer la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) en renfort. «Pourquoi avez-vous appelé la [GRC] si c'est pour vous faire pousser hors du blocus par des manifestants non armés, défoncés et ivres ?!», est-il possible de lire en légende de la vidéo publiée samedi sur le compte. Crowds swell in downtown Ottawa again for 2nd weekend of protests

The crowd in downtown Ottawa has grown by thousands of demonstrators as the second weekend of demonstrations against COVID-19 public health mandates is now underway. The Ottawa Police Service said it is deploying more officers and traffic controls this time around. Some protesters appear to have settled in, with bouncy castles, barbecues, wooden shacks and piles of food and fuel appearing in downtown streets and nearby parks. An encampment has gone up at Confederation Park, including a wooden shack, a large stockpile of wood and a tent. Downtown Ottawa remains a risky place to be, police said, and authorities are asking everyone to avoid the core if they can. Ontario Premier Doug Ford has called what's happening in the city unacceptable, saying it "was no longer a protest, but an occupation.". CBC Ottawa; Ottawa Citizen

Canadian cities brace for more anti vaccine mandate protests

Canadian cities, including the financial hub Toronto, are bracing for disruptions this weekend as protests against vaccine mandates spread from the capital of Ottawa. The so-called "Freedom Convoy" began as a movement against a vaccine requirement for cross-border truckers, but has turned into a rallying point against public health measures. Protestors have shut down downtown Ottawa for the past eight days, with some participants waving Confederate or Nazi flags and some saying they wanted to dissolve Canada's government. Toronto Police said they would have a ramped up presence in the city over the weekend due to anticipated protests. On Friday they closed a major downtown avenue, which is home to several hospitals, fearing protestors would otherwise impede access. Entry was limited to hospital staff, patients, family and people picking them up. Reuters; New York Times; United Press International

22-year-old man arrested during trucker protest in Toronto: police

A man has been arrested amid Toronto demonstrations in solidarity with the ongoing trucker "convoy" protests in Ottawa, police say. In a tweet at around 2:15 p.m., on Saturday, Toronto police said a man was arrested on the north side of Queen's Park. Hundreds of protesters have gathered in the city's downtown core on Saturday as part of ongoing demonstrations against COVID-19 restrictions and the federal government. Global News; CP24

The city and its roads are under siege by duelling protests

Traffic disruptions have begun in the Lower Mainland as thousands of protesters head to downtown Vancouver. Vancouver Police said westbound traffic was halted at Terminal Avenue just before 11 a.m. after two groups of protesters clashed. One is another truck convoy that left Langley on Saturday morning. It will go past Vancouver General Hospital and traffic is impacted on Grandview Highway, Broadway, and Burrard Street. The other is a counter protest of cyclists, which is not an organized event but a gathering of individuals who want to voice their opposition to the truck convoy, according to a Reddit post. Security upped at Legislative Building as protest arrives, police expect gathering gone by afternoon

With police expecting a protest to arrive at the Saskatchewan Legislative Building on Saturday to disperse in the afternoon, organizers appear to be preparing to occupy the area for a prolonged period. Similar protests are occurring in major cities across Canada this weekend in solidarity with the demonstration taking place in the nation's capital as it enters its second week. A GoFundMe fundraiser for the protestors that reached more than $10 million was pulled by the crowdfunding site Friday, citing evidence from law enforcement that the demonstration had become an occupation. Leaders of that protest say they won't leave until mask and vaccine mandates are ended, erecting a wooden shack in Ottawa's Confederation Park. The Saskatchewan protestors have echoed that sentiment. While Premier Scott Moe has said the Saskatchewan Party government will remove remaining mandates soon, the government has yet to provide a date. Regina Leader-Post; 1; Radio-Canada Saskatchewan

Bloquer la circulation pour manifester est maintenant interdit en Nouvelle-Écosse

Le gouvernement de la Nouvelle-Écosse a émis vendredi une nouvelle directive qui interdit aux manifestants de bloquer la circulation. Cette directive a été émise en vertu de la Loi sur les mesures d'urgence. Elle interdit aux manifestants de bloquer ou perturber la circulation sur n'importe quelle route, rue ou autoroute en Nouvelle-Écosse. La nouvelle directive fait suite à une autre, similaire, émise le 28 janvier interdisant aux manifestants d'organiser un blocage de l'autoroute 104 à la frontière de la Nouvelle-Écosse et du Nouveau-Brunswick en appui au Freedom Convoy 2022 et à l'événement Atlantic Hold the Line, écrit le bureau des mesures d'urgence de la province dans un communiqué, vendredi. Québec envahie par les camions et les klaxons

Des milliers de manifestants ont convergé samedi sur la colline parlementaire à Québec pour demander la fin des mesures sanitaires, et des dizaines de camions ont commencé à arriver de partout dans la province. « Non à la ségrégation » ou encore « Fuck Legault » pouvait-on lire sur les pancartes des manifestants, qui marchaient dans le bruit assourdissant des klaxons. « Je suis venu dénoncer les gens qui humilient, qui méprisent et stigmatisent les non-vaccinés sur la place publique. On parle d'êtres humains, de Québécois à part entière », a dénoncé Bruno Cossette, rencontré à l'ombre du parlement. Ce vétéran d'Afghanistan est venu de la Mauricie pour demander l'arrêt de l'urgence sanitaire au Québec.

« C'est un cri du cœur. Je demande la fin de l'état d'urgence sanitaire et qu'on restaure la démocratie dans ce building-là, a-t-il expliqué à La Presse. La liberté d'expression au Québec depuis 18 mois, c'est une autoroute de dix voies qui ne va que dans un sens. » La Presse; TVA Nouvelles; Radio-Canada Québec; CBC Montreal; CTV News Montreal; Montreal Gazette; Global News

Trucker protest arrives as city braces with police show of force, barricaded streets

With a robust police presence, cordoned-off streets and surveillance cameras, Toronto girded Saturday for its own version of the trucker-led protests that have roiled central Ottawa for a week. Hulking farm tractors and smaller trucks began arriving for the demonstration at Queen's Park on Friday afternoon. Police barricades prevented them from getting near the legislative building, leaving the activists to park alongside the Royal Ontario Museum. It was part of a law-enforcement effort designed to stave off a long-term occupation of the city's core and safeguard the five major hospitals that lie just south of Queen's Park on University Avenue. The protesters converged on Toronto to protest COVID-related vaccine mandates and lockdowns. The arrival of the farm vehicles was further indication that the movement has expanded beyond just the truck drivers who spearheaded the Ottawa event. Trucker convoy finds alternative funding platform

After GoFundMe shut down the $10-million campaign for the 'Freedom Convoy,' organizers have found another platform. The anti-mandate truck rally moved fast to GiveSendGo, which bills itself as the No. 1 free Christian fundraising site. GiveSendGo had already raised more than $1.1 million as of 10 a.m. Saturday and tweeted they did it in 12 hours despite bot attacks, noting they raised money five times faster than GoFundMe. GiveSendGo is swamped and the site was difficult to access Saturday morning. Dissenters on Twitter were quick to point out the site's association with alt-right groups. The Guardian did an expose of GiveSendGo last year after a data breach revealed that, "Serving police officers and public officials have donated money to fundraisers for accused vigilante murderers, far-right activists, and fellow officers accused of shooting black Americans." Toronto Sun

Florida governor to investigate GoFundMe over Canada trucker donations

Florida Governor Ron DeSantis said on Saturday it was fraud for GoFundMe to "commandeer" $9 million in donations sent to support protesting truckdrivers in Canada and that he will investigate what he called "deceptive practices" by the website. GoFundMe took down the so-called Freedom Convoy's page on Friday, saying it violated its terms of service. It said donors had two weeks to request a refund, then remaining funds would be disbursed to "credible and established charities." DeSantis, a Republican, said on Twitter it was fraud for GoFundMe to give the money "to causes of their own choosing," and he would work with Florida Attorney General Ashley Moody to investigate. "(T)hese donors should be given a refund." GoFundMe did not immediately respond to a Reuters request for comment on DeSantis' tweet. In a Twitter post, the company said on Saturday that "due to donor feedback" it was simplifying the process and will be refunding all donations to the Freedom Convoy 2022 fundraiser. Man charged in hit and run during Freedom Convoy protest, injuring four

A 42-year-old Headingley man faces charges of assault, dangerous driving and failing to stop at the scene of a serious accident after Winnipeg Police allege he drove his Jeep through a group of Freedom Convoy protesters at the Manitoba Legislature grounds injuring four men. On Friday night at shortly before 10 p.m., police were advised of a motor vehicle collision near Broadway and Memorial Boulevard. The initial information was that a westbound white Jeep Patriot had driven through the group of protesters. The Jeep struck four adults. Three sustained minor injuries and were treated at the scene by Winnipeg Fire Paramedic Service. The fourth was treated in hospital and released. The Jeep fled west down Portage Avenue, where police said numerous witnesses reported it travelling at high speeds and passing through red lights. With the assistance of the RCMP, WPS officers were able to stop the vehicle in the 4800 block of Portage Avenue just past the John Blumberg Golf Course at around 10:30 p.m. The lone male driver was arrested after a brief struggle. Commentary: Truckers in Canada protesting Covid vaccine mandates show Canada's Trumpists are growing

True to type, Canadians such as myself are humble enough to know that when the rest of the world thinks of us — which, admittedly, is almost never — it is as a kinder, gentler and less ideological version of our raucous American neighbors to the south. O Canada! We put the real in realpolitik. When you belong to a country mercifully untroubled by civil war, catastrophic political upheaval or alarming geopolitics, you are used to being looked upon as a shining beacon of all that is good. Whether that's entirely accurate, it is usually where the narrative ends. This may explain why Canada's been receiving some international side-eye lately. A nation that has spent the pandemic widely supportive of protective measures, such as travel restrictions, vaccine passports, occasional curfews and business closures, is making headlines at home and around the world as its capital city, Ottawa, is flooded with protesters pushing back. The Freedom Convoy, a demonstration against the requirement that Canadian truckers crossing the U.S. border be inoculated against Covid-19, has resulted in blocked streets around Parliament Hill as protesters demand an end to pandemic-related restrictions or for the prime minister to resign, or both. There are worries more protesters will arrive this weekend, and the people of Ottawa are fed up. NBC News

Ottawa Police

Police have responded to over 400 calls for service related to the demonstrations since they began.

In total, over 50 criminal offences are being investigated—11 of those were hate crimes which resulted in charges against four people. #ottawa #ottnews

Detectives are ensuring every report is investigated. Our hate crime hotline alone has received over 150 calls. To report a crime, call our Police Reporting Unit at 613-236-1222, extension 7300. To report a hate crime, dial extension 5015.

All available officers have been deployed.

Annie Bergeron-Oliver

OPS numbers: 495 officers needed to staff this in a 24 hour cycle. 478 officers dedicated to frontline. 24 hour period, on average 150 officers to cover what is needed outside the core. For demo so far, needed 225 officers. Surge, 120 officers.

Ottawa Police Chief Sloly - (takes time to reflect but he points at what the board member said) "The city is under siege. This is a threat to our democracy. There's a nationwide insurrection. This is madness." Chief Sloly says he will 1st explain the situation is today.

He also wants to explain what their plan is. Chief Sloly says as he looks at the definition of adequately and effective policing, "there is literally nothing in that definition that could resolve a city under siege that has a democracy threatened in a nationwide insurrection..."

Rachel Aiello

More police w full capabilities will soon be on the streets, Sloly says. Notes pulling GoFundMe hasn't deterred funding coming through other streams. Says he knows there is unlawful activity but are addressing it "as safely as possible." Sounds like CBSA has also offered to help.
